Assistance Programs

Types of Medication Assistance Programs

Free Medicine Revolution

There are 3 types of prescription assistance:

1. Informational sites: These sites give information about Patient Assistance Programs and may even provide you an application. Some are up to date and some aren't and you are really taking your chances because the Programs change all the time in respect to the applications and other requirements. Using the wrong information will probably get you denied for help with prescriptions. The best of these sites are www.needymeds.com and www.rxassist.org.
2. Prescription Advocate Programs: Prescription assistance can be made much easier when working with a prescription advocate program. A trained prescription advocate or company can ease the excruciatingly tenuous process of dealing with multiple patient assistance programs and ensure that you are approved for you medication right away. Moreover, they can manage your renewal processes to make sure that you receive an ongoing supply of free prescription medication instead of just the first supply.

These programs often charge a fee for their services but if they do their job correctly it is well worth it. However, we have seen many different kinds of companies and the level and quality of service varies from one to another. So you must choose which company you are going to work with to get help with prescriptions carefully. It's best to work with a company that takes full responsibility for everything for you from A-Z and has a lot of experience in the industry.

The best that we've seen is the pioneer company of prescription advocacy and offers the most complete and best level of service available anywhere. They are SCBN Prescription Advocacy and you can find them at (888) 331-1002 or at www.scbn.org.

3. The Partnership for Prescription Assistance: Partnership for Prescription Assistance is sponsored by the Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturer's Association (PhRMA), a lobbying company for the pharmaceutical industry. They run ads about Patient Assistance Programs and ride around the country in a big orange bus making speeches at politically expedient locations.

You can call them or go on their website and they will match the drugs that you take to the programs that give those medications and give you an application. They don't do much else. Their claims of helping 5 million people are suspect as they don't have any way of seeing if the people they've given applications to actually received medications or even sent in the applications. Our research shows that over 90% of all Patient Assistance Programs filled out without the help of an advocate are denied.
